

CR&DALL Seminar Series 2015-16

Community Development, The Arts and Issues of Criminality and Justice – Graeme McKerracher, Vox Liminis

Tuesday, December 15th, 2015, 12.30 - 1.30

Room 519, School of Education, St. Andrews Building, 11 Eldon Street,
University of Glasgow, Glasgow, G3 6NH

Vox Liminis is a creative community, developing the role of the arts in reducing crime and promoting justice in Scotland.

Working primarily through music, we work in prisons with prisoners and professional singer-songwriters to write songs together. We also work with families affected by crime.

- In conjunction with Families Outside we run In Tune music-making projects for young families with a parent in prison.
- With young people and young adults who have experienced family imprisonment during their teens, we are developing KIN – a creative arts project giving voice to young people’s experience. Vox Unbound is a weekly creative space in Glasgow city centre where we share a meal and make things together, leaving our roles, labels and pasts at the door.
- In conjunction with Distant Voices, we are exploring the role of the arts in affecting public attitudes to supporting reintegration of prisoners after a custodial sentence, opening up a public conversation on crime and punishment through songs.

All are welcome. Please RSVP to cradall@glg.ac.uk to book your place
